For four weeks last spring, severe weather battered communities across the central United States. Day after day, millions of people lived under the threat of disaster as deadly storms unleashed flash flooding, hail and more than 500 tornadoes in multiple states, including a fierce EF-3 tornado that left a path of destruction across Missouri’s capital city. The severe weather killed at least seven people and pushed rivers to record flood levels, engulfing roadways, homes and businesses and forcing families to evacuate.

In just 17 days, Americares delivered 11 shipments of essential medicine and relief supplies for affected families across Arkansas, Ohio, Oklahoma and Missouri. Americares relief for stricken families included truckloads of bottled water and first aid supplies, as well as critical tetanus vaccines and insulin for diabetic patients who lost medication in the storm.

“Americares relief supplies give survivors what they need to recover—and regain a sense of normalcy,” says Americares Vice President of Emergency Programs Kate Dischino.

Thanks to You, Health Care After a Deadly Earthquake

Fadliah clutched her 4-day-old baby as dirty water rose quickly around her. In Palu City, Indonesia, an earthquake had triggered a tsunami, collapsing Fadliah’s house and sending a muddy wave over her and her tiny boy.

Once she was safe in a neighbor’s car, the young mother cleaned mud from her baby’s mouth, relieved to see him breathing. The magnitude 7.5 earthquake on September 28, 2018, killed more than 4,000 people, destroyed 70,000 homes and wrecked roads and bridges.

Americares responded immediately, working alongside local health organizations to quickly set up and equip 15 emergency women’s health centers near where Fadliah and other homeless survivors sought shelter in tents. Fadliah brought her little boy for checkups every couple of weeks.

Americares trained over 400 health workers, including midwives, in mental health and psychosocial care, knowing that every patient had experienced the trauma of the earthquake, which in one area had turned soil to quicksand, swallowing homes and people.

Now, Americares is making sure that thousands of women continue to have the health care they need by replacing the temporary emergency health centers with more stable structures designed to last three years. One such building had just barely opened when it saw three healthy babies born in just 72 hours.

“Each new baby is a sign of how much these health centers are needed,” says Americares Vice President of Emergency Programs Kate Dischino. Permanent health centers will be built when the government decides where it is safe for people to relocate.

In the months following the earthquake, Americares began replacing the temporary health centers with structures designed to last three years—one center saw three babies born in three days (above).
Cyclone Response: Your Donation at Work in the U.S. and Africa

Americares responds to an average of 30 disasters each year. Here’s how Americares responded to two disasters in March 2019.

Nebraska

In mid-March, a bomb cyclone with blizzards, hurricane-like winds and heavy rain pushed rivers in Nebraska over their banks, flooding homes and towns and overwhelming cropland. Residents were trapped by rising waters and closed roads.

March 18: Americares emergency response team contacts Nebraska health departments, first responders and health centers, some of which are ongoing partners and already receive non-emergency aid from Americares. Four organizations request medicine and supplies from Americares, including Amanda Jeffres, RN, from Loup Basin Public Health Department, who requests tetanus vaccine, which protects survivors from infection from cuts and scrapes.

March 20: Americares delivers the vaccine overnight. “We were due for a delivery from our regular supplier, but roads were closed, and the delivery was on hold,” says Jeffres. Also in the shipment—hygiene supplies for survivors living in camps and cleanup kits to prevent mold in flooded homes.

March 21: Jeffres and her team deliver the vaccine to car, covering their 7,100-square-mile territory. “The road department was working sunup to sundown, so we vaccinated the workers during their lunch hour,” says Jeffres.

In response to the storm, Americares provided more than $67,000 in medicine and medical supplies to partners throughout the state.

Malawi and Mozambique

A powerful cyclone slammed the eastern coast of Africa on March 15, lingering for days over Mozambique and also flooding Malawi and Zimbabwe. Officially 1,037 lives lost, the true death toll may never be known. In some areas of Mozambique, most homes were destroyed by winds, while roads to the most affected remote areas were impassable due to flooding.

March 21: Americares deploys an emergency response team to Mozambique and/rediracts staff already in Malawi. The teams coordinate with national and international responders, traveling by helicopter to remote regions. Where are clinics still standing? What are the health risks?

March 24: In Mozambique, responders identify cases of cholera, a deadly diarrheal disease spread by flood waters. There is also concern for the safety of women and children, as families have been split apart by the storm. Americares prepares shipments of medicine and medical supplies.

April 22: Americares begins to train more than 500 local health workers at seven health centers to control cholera and other infectious diseases. In addition to a dozen locations, Americares equips women’s health clinics and safe, private spaces where women and children can receive care for stress and trauma. The team in Malawi distributes shipments of medicine and supplies and emergency funding for farmers who will need to replant ruined crops to feed their families in the coming months.

Cyclone Response: Your Donation

When Susan makes an appointment at Community Health Care Clinic in Normal, Illinois, she knows clinic staff will address her health needs and treat her with compassion. She suffers from high blood pressure that is resistant to treatment. “Without this clinic, I’d be dead,” says Susan. The clinic’s high-quality care meets the standard of Patient-Centered Medical Homes, which Community Health Care Clinic reached with support from Americares and BD (Becton, Dickinson and Company).

This work with charitable clinics is just one aspect of BD’s partnership with Americares. Since 1986, BD has provided nearly $40 million in critical support, including donated medical supplies, to Americares health programs. BD-donated supplies include syringes and pen needles that patients with diabetes need to inject insulin—providing both cost savings and lifesaving care. To better understand the impact of all donated medical supplies, BD has also been a partner in unique research Americares is conducting.

For BD employees, the partnership with Americares provides an opportunity to lend their expertise to communities in need. For example, Americares hosts BD Volunteer Service Trips, which most recently took place at the Americares Family Clinic in rural El Salvador. There, BD volunteers demonstrated best practices in diabetes care and provided leadership skill training. Future trips will focus on planning for continuity of care in chronic disease care during disasters.

“BD is committed to advancing the world of health,” says Jennifer Farrington, Senior Director of Social Investing for BD and Vice President of the BD Foundation. “Americares relationships with thousands of health care clinics in the U.S. and around the world help BD share its products and its expertise with people in need, who ordinarily wouldn’t have access to quality care.”
